WEATHER

WEATHER SYNOPSIS BY REGION:

Eureka Weather:

A dissipating front may bring some very light rain to areas primarily north of Humboldt Bay this afternoon and evening. A drying and warming trend will begin midweek as a strong ridge of high pressure builds across the region.

San Francisco Weather:

The forecast area will have seasonable weather today and Tuesday with coastal clouds and near normal temperatures. A significant warming and drying trend will develop on Wednesday as offshore flow develops across the Bay Area. Temperatures will trend warm to hot by the end of the week and into the weekend raising fire weather concerns across much of northern and central California.

CENTRAL CALIFORNIA AND SOUTHERN SAN JOAQUIN VALLEY

Sacramento Weather:

Dry and warmer weather this coming week with locally breezy north winds during the middle of the week as high pressure rebuilds across the region.

Hanford Weather:

The upper-level low over the Great Basin will move east today ending the threat of showers and thunderstorms. By midweek, a ridge of high pressure will build over California with a return to dry weather and above normal temperatures.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA:

Los Angeles Weather:

Warming is expected through midweek as the upper low currently over Nevada moves east. Hot and dry weather is likely late in the week and next weekend as surface high pressure builds into the Great Basin and offshore develops.

Extreme Southwestern California Including Orange, San Diego, Western Riverside and Southwestern San Bernardino Counties:

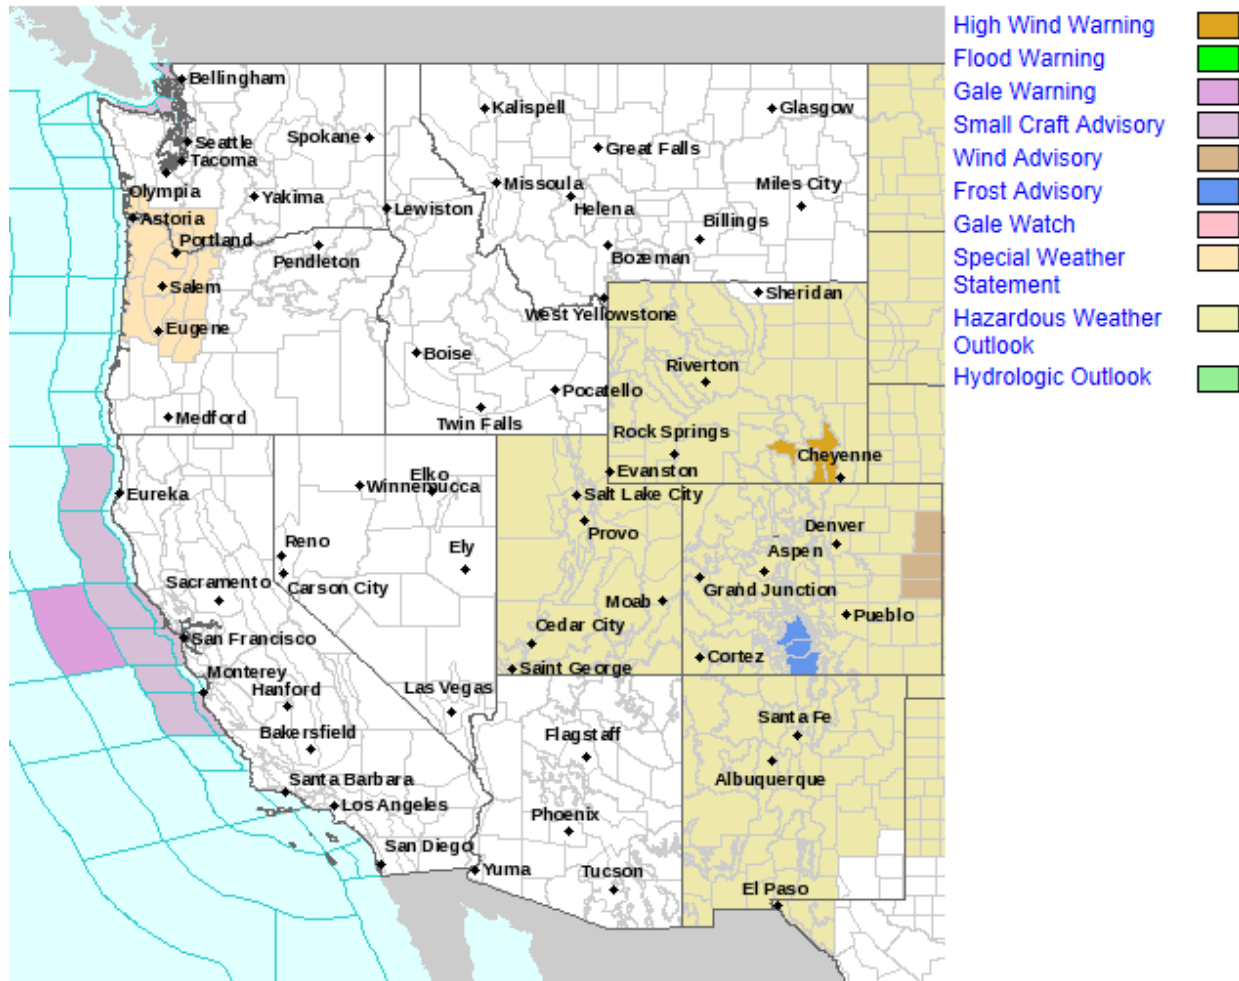

Seasonal weather with weak offshore flow will continue into Wednesday. For Thursday into next weekend, high pressure aloft and weak to locally moderate offshore flow with gusty northeast winds will bring significant warming and drying to inland areas.

Southeast California Weather:

Dry and stable west to northwesterly flow will establish itself over the area this week keeping skies mostly clear and zeroing out any chances for precipitation. Temperatures will open the week below normal and gradually warm through the week as high pressure establishes itself over the west.
